

b) With very careful, controlled gestures take the marijuana cigarette you were smoking and swallow it.

c) Ask him inside to meet the rest of the gang, about 20 representatives from the local Black Panther Party.

5) You're invited to a sensitivity training session.

a) You decline because it conflicts with your weekly bowling game.

b) You accept, but only if there are going to be lots of girls there.

c) You go, because it's time we started relating to one another on a deeper level. After all, we're all playing in the same band, aren't we?

6) School ends, and you go home to your folks for vacation. That night, during dinner, they jokingly ask you "if you burned any buildings lately." You slowly put down your fork, and

a) Excuse yourself, because you're 15 minutes late already in picking up your date for tonight, and she lives five miles away.

b) Carefully look around the room, casting meaningful glances at the new color TV set, the six-months-old sofa, the brand-new china set, the food on the table, and say, "You'll never understand, will you?"

c) Reply, "As a matter of fact, yes. Didn't you know I was expelled from school and have been living in a commune for the past five weeks?"

7) You have just won the "1970 Youth of the Year" award, and have been flown to Washington, D.C., to receive it from President Nixon. With all the news media present, Nixon hands you the plaque, and congratulates you. You reply, a) Thank you.

b) I don't see how you can look yourself in the mirror every morning.

c) Could I take Julie to the movies tonight?

8) You and some of your friends decide, for a lark, to visit some of the local gay bars. In one of them you spot your English 174 instructor, surrounded by a bunch of young men. You

a) Run out of the bar, and don't show up for his class for the next two weeks.

b) Go up to him and ask him if he'll dance the next number with you.

c) Shrug, and think to yourself that he sure doesn't look like one.

9) Your best friend has just confessed to you he is part of a group of people planning to take over the local federal courthouse. You are the only, outside the group, he tells you, who knows about their plan. What do you do?

a) Make a call to Washington, D.C., and tell the man on the other end of the phone line that in return for getting you a draft-deferred status you might give him an interesting piece of information.

b) Tell your friend you "know a lot about plastics," if he gets your meaning.

c) You inform your friend there is no local federal courthouse. The building they're planning to take over is a ten-story parking garage.

10) You meet a new, prospective girlfriend. On your first date she asks what sign you were born under. You

a) Think to yourself how lucky you can be, finally meeting someone who's into the same things you are.

b) Tell her you wish she wouldn't interrupt while you're concentrating on your bowling game.

c) Repeat to her a joke from an old Johnny Carson Show, in which Johnny told Ed "that he was born under the sign on 4th and Brooklyn."

BONUS QUESTION. A friend of yours, who is campus chairman for the Committee to Save the Environment, has accompanied you on your yearly trek to buy a Christmas tree. You have $15 in your possession, and figure in buying a $5 tree, thus having enough money left over for a lid of grass.

But your friend has just pointed out to you a "living" tree selling for $9. For $4 more, he pleads, you can buy a breathing, living tree, which you can then re-plant.

You think about it—realizing that following your environmentalist friend's suggestion will mean going without grass for another two weeks. You tell him, a) Nine bucks for a tree? You're crazy! You're lucky I'm even buying a REAL tree—do you know how cheap plastic ones are?

b) You're right. It's the least I can do. After all, we have to put something good back into this depleted planet of ours.

c) OK. I'll buy the $9 tree . . . if you can show me where I can plant one in the sixth floor of an apartment building.

ALL RIGHT, NOW THAT YOU HAVE TAKEN THE TEST, LET'S SEE HOW YOU FARED.

1) Did you answer "all" the questions?

You lose. Anybody who read this is obviously not "Right On." Better go home and take a shower. Then go see a movie with your girl; there are a couple of good films at the Varsity. Power to the people.

The times, they are a-changing, mamma

The offices of Dean of Men and of Dean of Women were abolished this year.

"It's the end of an era," said Mrs. Dorothy Strawn, former Dean of Women, adding that nowadays on this campus parental-type images just quite aren't making it.

So what if I've got a crewcut?

Sam Guess, Spokane State Senator, recently went out of his way to guarantee academic freedom. In a bill he will soon introduce, Guess provided 19 ways to expel students from a college, including for traffic violations.

Said Guess about his bill, "I've got wide campus support for it."

Have you ever walked to your classes, thinking that yes, you too were doing your bit to build a mass people's movement in Amerikka, when you heard somebody shout, "Fascist!", and he was yelling at you?

Did you attend the last Radical Speakers forum, and the moment you sat down somebody accused you of being an FBI infiltrator?

It's not easy to be "with it" any more.

How can you be sure that today's relevance isn't tomorrow's William F. Buckley? Sure, today you're getting it on with the local liberation movement—but what about tomorrow, when it's labeled the newest pig chauvinist oppression tool?

Well, don't worry about it. Again, as always, The DAILY will open the basement doors and shed light onto the burning question of every good campus liberal. . . "Am I RIGHT ON?"

Just answer the following ten multiple choice questions, as:

The DAILY presents the "Are you Right On?" test

1) Your girlfriend's sister has just joined Women's Lib. Upon first meeting her, you say,

a) Your's dinner going to be ready?

b) I know I can't ever experience childbirth, but I fully sympathize with the oppressive plight this chauvinistic society has placed upon all women in this dirty world.

c) Say, didn't I see you last Friday at the Alpha Chi's kegger?

2) It's the first day of your Social Sciences 727 course. The professor walks into the room, and says, "Everything's going to be groovy. There's not going to be any structure in this class. This quarter we're going to try to learn what makes people tick, what's inside our heads. We're a community, and we'll work together." What do you do?

a) Excuse yourself and go, outside to throw up.

b) Take some dope out of your pockets and start passing it around.

c) Raise your hand and ask if you can relate to the class your experiences last summer with a group of Siberian nomads.

3) There is a knock at your door. It's a representative from the local "Venceremos" brigade, asking for contributions so that the group can travel to Cuba to help out in the sugar harvest. You look at the "Venceremos" representative straight in the eye, and

a) Slam the door in his face.

b) Reply, "Sure, brother, anything I can do to help the cause. Will $10 do?"

c) Explain that you already gave at the office.

4) There is a knock at your door. It's a representative from the FBI, asking you if you were in the vicinity of Clark Hall on the evening of October 9. You look him straight in the eye, and

a) Start crying.
